Hitherto the Government of Peking has shown itself very remiss in looking after the interests of its subjects in foreign countries. It is true that by the laws of the Central Kingdom onigratren is forbidden, but it has been tacitly permitted for a great number of years, and the Imperial Government is certainly fraud not relieved of its responsibility because it has not formally repealed a law that has fallen into desuctude. Had the Cubans thought that there was any probability of their being called to account for their oppression and ill-treatment of the Chinese they would not have carried their cruelty to such an extent, and would doubtless never have regarded the coolies as "dumb driven cattle" who had none to appeal to for succour or justice. We sincerely trust that if any attempt is made to renew emigration from China to Cuba the utmost care will be taken to protect the coolie from rapacity or ill-treatment. Emigration per se is eminently desirable the absence of the prisoner, and in consequence for China, which urgently needs outlets for its should not emigrate to any country where there is a legitimate field for their industry if their Government will but perform duty and secure to them (as it very well -can) protection for their freedom and pro-

CURRENT TOPICS. -The war in the East and the unsatisfactory osition of foreign politics place domestic questions in the shade. The Queen is enjoying herself in Scotland, the Prince of Wales is attending to the court duties, the harvest is but sum and substance of everything stirring here.

THE RUSS) TURKISH WAR. As for the Eastern Question, its compliantions, ramifications, and entanglements become worse and worse day by day, and I am much afraid that a general European war must be the inevitable result. In order to explain my meaning I must, in the first place, attempt to show the position of affairs between the Turk and the Muscovite. Beginning in Asia Minor, the Russian and Ottoman forces are simply haggling at. each other to prevent rainforcements being sent to the scene of strife in Bulgaria. Thousands are being slain simply in pursuonce of this policy. The season is so far advanced and the resources of each combatant are so much exhausted that nothing but wanton destruction of life is even aimed at. Proceeding westward we come to the Dobrudsohn, the eastern extremity of the Danubian buttlefield. There the Russians have a large army under General Zimmerman, whose duty it is to prevent the Turks crossing the Danube and destroying the Roumanian railways, whereby the Russians draw their supplies. Should the Russians abandon this position their communications would be cut off, whilst should the Turks abandon it the Russians would attack the flank come to the Turkish Quadralateral, which remains with the parent stream, namely, the Lom and the has been concentrated. The Russians obtained Tirnova they crossed the Halkans, and, capturing The Turks occupying Plevna, far to the west of the Russian area of occupation, entirely foiled the Russian plans, it beling clear that the Muscovite army could not cross the Balkans whilst a large Turkish force was operating on its flanks. The Turks attempted to cross the Balkans from the south and drive the Russiana out of the Shipka Pass, the idea being that their army south of the Balkans under Suleiman Pasha would, if successful, be enabled either to reinforce; the army at Plevna or to harass the Russians who had had the temerity to seize and hold Tirnova. It became as plain as daylight that the Russians could do nothing until the Turkish force at Plevna should be driven away, and, as all the world knows, the Muscovitenttack on this position ended in a deplorable disaster. It then became a question with the Russians of the seizure of Plevna or www.tim irreparable rain, and the Turks accepted a comical being the case of a very well-known the Shipka Pass was attacked so vigorously and keeper of a native hotel and restaurant. It defended so obstinately. Anyhow, the Turks seems that on one of the first evenings after the were sectohed and the Russians, by a clever panic bad set in, he spent rather a convivial manouvre, took Levatz, which lies between the Shipka and Plevia, for be it understood that for opening in the morning, the servents were although Suleiman could not drive the Russians unable to wake him, and argued that he must be out of the Pass he did succeed in driving them. ill, deciding furthermore, under the impetus of into their entrenchments, and he could by availing himself of another Pass hold them in their entrenchments and at the same time augment police, who stationed a man at the house which the Plevna garrison, but the Russian occupation remained shut up to prevent people going in of Levatz checkmated him and left the Plevus or out. So imperative a necessity was the capture of gerous man. This was too much, and bursting Plevna that the Czar proceeded thither in person and so hardpressed was he for reinforcements that he gave the command of the right division of the army to Prince Charles of Roumania for the sake of the thirty odd thousand troops which that unscrupulous adventurer commanded.
